not be possible to find a single, simple, and unambiguous definition of the term "maternal gatekeeping." The term is used in a variety of ways in the literature, and it is not clear whether it refers to a specific behavior, a pattern of behavior, or a broader attitude or belief system. In this paper, we define maternal gatekeeping as a pattern of behavior in which a mother's actions and attitudes interfere with or obstruct a father's involvement in his or her child's life. This definition is based on the idea that maternal gatekeeping is a form of parental alienation, which is a process by which a parent seeks to undermine the other parent's relationship with their child. We argue that maternal gatekeeping can take many different forms, and it can be influenced by a variety of factors, including the mother's personality, the father's personality, and the quality of the parents' relationship. We also discuss the potential consequences of maternal gatekeeping for children and families, and we offer some suggestions for how to address this problem.
